

I like to do what the header of this article is every now & then; it offers one good insight into how spirit work goes. When I summon, I just don't expect anything & have a stance in the sense of "It either works or it doesn't", of course after divination, preparation etc. I find that this is the simplest and most effective way to avoid disappointment.

Like I have mentioned in previous articles, if something doesn't work despite all of one's preparations, it's due to a lack of opportunities; not enough or nothing there to work with. The whole "You can't pluck feathers from a bald chicken" bit. Divination will indicate how a spirit will go to work and the potential for success, but not that there are no chances to capitalize on, and nothing is ever guaranteed; the aforementioned is the stipulation or condition to this rule. The examples that I will list from my own life are interesting to observe. Spirits in general are more or less above human comprehension or understanding, but their modus operandi or way of doing things can be observed. We as human beings are superior to most animals, but make no mistake: A bird can easily observe you & see what your pattern and daily go-about consists of; the time when- and way you do things.

. When working with Clauneck for work, why did it work? Why was the work a success? Without Him telling me anything, I can observe the following: He looked into and gauged my needs, seeing that I want a job where I can work from home, make as much money as possible, and relating to my specialties etc...."Hmmm, this is what this guy wants". Next, he scanned my location for opportunities, and in this case employers that best match my needs like some kind of app. And Voila, result! Point is, there was enough in the way of things to work with.

. When dealing with Sitri and Fro'glatash for sex, no strings attached, why didn't it work? Why did it fail? Observation: There was nothing there to do anything. I wanted like I mentioned, just sex- no relationship or anything. Shortly summarized, the women in my country generally don't want that and are archaic in their way of thinking- sex is limited to just penetration & if they see you as "the one" in their mind, so little to no foreplay or anything. Exceptions are gold diggers and others that have no morals and want to take advantage of you somehow. Lastly, most women here are ugly and I have high demands when it comes to looks. The concept of friends with benefits refers more to- and is customary in the West. Not here, unfortunately. But bottom line is that it did not work, because of these reasons; There were no chances and resources available, period. Nothing to work with.

Analyzing & reflecting, looking back

Very interesting from a researcher's perspective. Food for thought.
